St Brigid's College Horsham showcased what it has to offer prospective students during an open day last month. Year eight co-ordinator Leigh McDonald said about sixty families attended the day. "The day was about showing prospective students in their later years of primary school what we've got," he said. "They're making their decisions about where they're going to start their secondary school, so we're trying to entice some of them to our school."

Mr McDonald said current students led groups of families around the school. "They were able to show different learning areas. For example, they did little activities involving science in our science rooms," he said. "Some of the food students had cooked was available to sample and our aerobics team did a performance for some of the tour groups."
