Human trafficking and the role of women

Myanmar Cardinal Charles Maung Bo said women in his country are working to end human trafficking. He said trafficking was a big problem in Myanmar and one which shifts focus from other conversations on women at the Synod of Bishops on young people, faith, and vocations.

"The situation of the young people here in Europe and in Asia is quite different. In Myanmar, the women, with the help of some religious congregations and the Church, are focusing especially on how to save the young girls and women from human trafficking," He said that his homeland sees high levels of human trafficking into Thailand and China, and that China's "one child policy" had created a demand for the illegal trade in women and girls. Other serious issues faced by young people in his country like poverty, drug use, and a lack of education.
