30th Sunday in Ordinary Time / Year C 26th & 27th October 2019

The parable of the Pharisee and the toll collector follows that of the persistent widow and the unjust judge. Luke frames the parable with comments about being just or in right relationship (translated "virtuous") and justified (translated "at rights with God"). It is addressed to "certain people" who will find a mirror image of themselves in the first of the characters, the Pharisee. Historically, the Pharisees were honorable people, well-versed in Jewish religious traditions and faithful in observing the Law. They made up a very small percentage of the population. In the gospels, they often appear as code for religious leadership that is self-focused, contemptuous of others, and out of touch with the struggle of ordinary people's lives. In Luke, some of the Jesus' harshest condemnation is reserved for the Pharisees of the gospel.

The Pharisee goes up to the Jerusalem Temple to pray. There is no surprise in this. That is what Pharisees do. More surprising is the identification of the other person who also heads for the Temple to pray, a toll collector or tax agent, a man in the pay of the occupying forces, not exactly a person to be trusted and certainly not one connected with proper worship. The Pharisee prays "to himself" or "by himself" or "about himself": any one of the three translations is possible. He prays with his eyes cast sideways towards his thieving prayer companion. He prides himself on going beyond the prescriptions of the Law. The toll collector, in contrast, stands at a distance, eyes cast down, beating his breast, acknowledging his need for God's mercy and recognizing God as the source of compassion and forgiveness. For an audience who "have confidence in themselves that they are righteous", this portrait of the tax agent in right relationship with God is confronting. For such people, being a tax agent is synonymous with being unrighteous.

The language of the toll collector's prayer, "God be merciful (hilasthēti) to me a sinner", evokes the prayer of a young man of Judah who, almost two centuries before, had seen his brothers die for their faith and who was himself facing death. The young man acknowledged the waywardness of his people, praying that God would be merciful to them and deliver them from persecution (2 Maccabees 7:37). The toll collector of the Lukan parable is more in tune with the faith tradition of his people than is its respected guardian, the Pharisee. Once again, right relationship with God and others is less a matter of who we are or what we do than the spirit in which we do it. There is no room for self-righteousness in a gospel way of life. We all need to admit our failings with humility, turn to God for forgiveness, and change our ways. Right now, this is what we are called to do as a human community that has failed to respect the integrity of the natural world and has exploited it for our own selfish ends. We can learn from the tax collector.

Sacred Heart Conference

Paul McCarthy, the St Vincent de Paul State Co-ordinator for the "Assist a Student Program" has asked us to thank all those who have assisted the program in the past and is seeking participants again. The AAS program helps students in very poor circumstances in countries to our north, from India to Fiji, to get to school. We all appreciate that education is the key in helping people to get out of the poverty cycle. It costs $70.00 to assist one student for one year. Pamphlets and sponsorship slips are available at the Church doors. Any queries to Patricia Fitzgibbon 5021 5486. Many thanks from all the members of the Sacred Heart Conference, St Vincent de Paul Society

OCTOBER 31: WORLD CITIES DAY

Cities have always been controversial. Some people have seen them as the great centres of culture and human development. For others, cities have been evil places that lure people away from the real human world of the country. One stark Biblical image of the city was the Tower of Babel, the symbol of rebellion against God. But another beautiful image of the city was that of the heavenly Jerusalem, the city that would come down to gather people at the end of time. Later in England London was for some people the only place to be. For others it was a boil on the face of the earth. St Augustine drew on both those images when he contrasted two human attitudes to God - the City of God in which people put God first, and the human city in which human desires and passions dominate people's lives. His images suggest that cities, like other human creations, are what we make of them. They express in their design and daily life the relationships that compose human life: relationships over space and time between people, between groups within society, and with the natural world. Where those relationships are right, they express themselves in a livable city conducive to human happiness. If relationships are toxic, so will be the life of the city.

This suggests that cities do not simply grow like topsy, uncontrollable by human beings. They are the result of human decisions that express the values of those who live in them. If they are surrounded by squalid settlements of poor people who could see no future for themselves in the country because agricultural produces were kept artificially low, these slums follow from deliberate decisions. If cities are filled with art galleries, open grassed spaces, modest, well designed and carefully made buildings, and musical venues, this shows that its representatives valued art and music and expansive human living so highly that they subsidised the costs of such gracious living

Some cities are temples of mammon where the wealthy live in gated estates, many others on the streets and in overpriced, badly built apartments, where planning rules have built-in loopholes to accommodate the greedy, where air pollution is encouraged, and the poor go hungry, and the GDP rises like a balloon on the financial speculation of the wealthy. The air, the frustrations of transport and the simmering resentment of such cities flow from the human decisions that have gone into their making.

At Jesuit Social services we know the crucial importance for the vulnerable young people whom we serve of well-designed suburbs, towns and cities. They tend to have been raised in relatively few areas that are poorly resourced and disadvantaged in every respect. They cannot easily access services that might make a difference to their lives.

To build good cities requires sustained attention to all the relationships that compose them and shared determination to ensure that they contribute to the good of all their citizens. It requires that in the making of money people have in mind the good of the whole city and not simply their own gain. It requires that the commons – public spaces and services - be protected and not exploited for private gain. It requires government attention to civic design and effective public transport, to the location of businesses, schools, hospitals and to development that will allow community groups to flourish.

Ultimately cities are about human beings, and human beings are ultimately about relationships. These are expressed in the glory or grottiness of cities. It is up to us who live in cities to ensure that although our feet and hands can never be busy in more than one place simultaneously, our minds and hearts can embrace the whole world. They can move beyond our street, suburb, city and nation to the universe and make the flourishing of all human beings part of our business in our homes and workplaces. Cities are places of the heart as well as of concrete. Andrew Hamilton SJ

CHURCHES WANT MORE TALKS ON DISCRIMINATION BILL

The National Council of Churches has warned that Attorney-General Christian Porter's religious freedom reforms are "premature" and could trigger "unintended consequences". Source: The Australian.

The council, which includes key ethnic religious groups such as the Coptic, Greek, Indian, Syrian and Romanian orthodox churches, Chinese Methodists, Churches of Christ, the Armenian Apostolic Church and Assyrian Church of the East, has told Mr Porter "more conversation is needed".

In its submission to the Attorney-General's Department, the council — whose members also included the Catholic Church, Anglican Church, the Salvation Army, the Uniting Church and the Quakers — said they wanted further roundtable discussions. The Australian understands Mr Porter will not engage in further roundtable meetings but was open to discussing concerns with stakeholders. He has met with more than 90 organisations during the consultation process, including a roundtable process that began within days of him releasing an exposure religious discrimination bill in August.

The council said "some of our leaders have come from places where their experience is of religious persecution".

"National church leaders do not want unintended consequences as a result of seeking legislative protection of religious freedoms," the NCCA wrote.

"They want to find the best way to integrate freedom from religious discrimination with legislation to protect against other forms of discrimination."

The diverse membership of the NCCA includes ethnic groups prominent in key electorates across the nation, including western Sydney, where Labour MPs have conceded they needed to better address concerns of multicultural communities on religious freedoms.

Other faiths, including Islamic and Christian groups, have also expressed concerns with elements of Mr Porter's draft bill. Mr Porter conceded last week that his discrimination bill might not be resolved before the end of the year and that changes to the draft legislation were expected.

"Not everyone's going to be perfectly happy. That's the nature of this type of legislation," Mr Porter said last week.

PARISH NEWS:

Thank you to those who volunteered their time to help prepare the church and surrounds for Leon Wagner's funeral last Thursday – a fitting tribute to a man who worked tirelessly for the Merbein Com-

During October, which is traditionally known as Mission Month let us take to heart the words of Pope Francis "In this extraordinary missionary month, let us pray that the Holy Spirit engender new missionary spring in the Church". You are invited pick up a Mission envelope at the church entrance and make a donation to those who are less fortunate than ourselves.

The next stage of discernment for the Plenary Council will be presented to you today. You will be invited to choose one of the six areas that you are concerned or interested in exploring further. We all need to take part in this Plenary Council to discern what the Spirit is asking of us here in Merbein. A big 'thank you' to the OLSH School staff who gave up their staff meeting time to reflect, discuss and prepare a submission to the Plenary Council.
