Ballarat Diocese signs up to the National Redress Scheme

Bishop Paul has signed a deed of participation on behalf of our Diocese of Ballarat. This means that when anyone contacts the Commonwealth government's redress scheme with a claim relating to our diocese, the government would contact Australian Catholic Redress who would then contact our diocese to respond to RESPONDING TO NEEDS the claim. We would provide whatever information the government redress agency requests. Then we would make whatever response to the claim that the government agency decides is appropriate in each case. Payments will come from diocesan funds rather than from funds belonging to any parish. This has been the case with claims from survivors up till now and it will continue to be the case with claims that come through the National Redress Scheme. While we cannot predict what the total payments will be, Bishop Paul is hopeful that the diocese will be able to meet all the payments that will be required of us. If we do need help in this, we will be able to call on help from other dioceses. All the dioceses that are participating in the Australian Catholic Redress company have agreed to support one another as needed. This means that if our diocese did not have sufficient funds, the other dioceses would assist. If another diocese did not have sufficient funds, our diocese would join with the rest in providing assistance. The amount of support would be proportioned to the Catholic population of each diocese. The larger archdioceses would provide the greater part of the assistance. We would provide support according to the size of our Catholic population.

Gospel Reflection Sr Veronica Lawson RSM

The time between Christmas and New Year is often family time, a good time to think about what family means. For many, it is a challenge to juggle the various family commitments. We do our best, and trust that everyone will understand the difficult choices that sometimes have to be made. It is now three years since the Synod on the Family in Rome. So much has happened globally since then that we are in danger of letting this significant event pass into history without giving it the ongoing attention it deserves. The Pope's concluding words of concern for "difficult cases and wounded families" merit our attention. For Pope Francis, the Synod was "about bearing witness to everyone that, for the Church, the Gospel continues to be a vital source of eternal newness, against all those who would 'indoctrinate' it in dead stones to be hurled at others." The pope reasserted his constant message that the Church's "first duty is not to hand down condemnations or anathemas, but to proclaim God's mercy." Today's readings invite us to focus on family relationships. At a very basic level, we are all "children of God" (1 John 3:1), invited to remember the love that God has "lavished on us". In the gospel reading, Luke presents the young Jesus coming with his parents from Nazareth to Jerusalem "as usual" for the great feast of Passover. He is twelve years of age, capable in that culture of making quite serious decisions for himself. He does just that, much to the consternation of his parents, who only become aware after a day's journey that he has remained in Jerusalem and has not joined the extended family group or synodia for the return journey to Nazareth. Mary and Joseph are not well pleased. They express their concern but fail to understand his response: he is primarily God's child and must follow God's call first and foremost. This does not preclude obedience to his parents. It does, however, foreshadow the pain involved in parenting this young man whose mission will take him along paths they would never have chosen for him. I expect this will sound familiar to parents of young adults. As Luke's story unfolds, Joseph fades from the picture. Mary lives in the reflective way we are all called to live, "storing all these things in her heart". Sometimes God's call to children is in tension with parents' wishes or hopes. Children are first of all "children of God". Much as we might want to, we cannot hold on to them. We try to understand their choices, we do everything we can to nurture their uniqueness, and we pray that they too will grow in wisdom and stature and in favour with God as responsible members of the whole Earth community.
